

Imijelo Yophuhliso Website Design Brief

Websites for Inspiration

- Habitat for Humanity: Structure, navigation, and clear pathways for different audiences.
- Charity: Water: Storytelling, impact communication, and communicating a clear journey of change.
- WWF: Visual identity, photography, and professional presentation.
- Ashoka: Change-maker positioning, agency, and community-led social change.

Strategic Positioning

Draw inspiration from Ashoka's approach to framing social change by presenting people and communities as agents of change rather than beneficiaries of services.

The website should reflect Imijelo's philosophy that sustainable change occurs when people, families, and communities build agency, strengthen relationships, foster inclusion, and work together to create opportunities that improve wellbeing.

Position Imijelo Yophuhliso not as a charity delivering services to passive recipients, but as a community development organisation that enables young people, families, caregivers, children with disabilities, older adults, and communities to build agency, strengthen relationships, participate actively in community life, and access opportunities that improve wellbeing.

The tone should be hopeful, empowering, and solutions-oriented. Participants should be portrayed as active citizens, leaders, mentors, learners, caregivers, and contributors to community wellbeing.

Content should emphasise community assets, strengths, local knowledge, relationships, participation, resilience, and collective action rather than focusing primarily on lack/deficits, needs, or vulnerability.

Website Personality

The website should feel:

- Community-centred
- Hopeful
- Authentic
- Thoughtful and evidence-informed
- Inclusive
- Intergenerational

- Empowering rather than charitable
- Professional but warm
- Accessible and engaging

Core Narrative

The website should communicate that meaningful social change occurs when people, families, and communities build agency, strengthen relationships, foster inclusion, and participate actively in community life, leading to greater access to opportunities that improve wellbeing.

This narrative should reflect Imijelo's Theory of Change: Identity → Behaviour → Agency → Opportunity

Website Information Architecture (for navigation and content sections)

Future Readiness & Opportunity Development

Smart Generation Movement

- Money Management
- Leadership Development
- Career Readiness
- Mentorship
- Future Planning
- Agency

Community Wellbeing & Inclusion

- Disability Inclusion
- Parent Support Groups
- Youth Wellbeing
- Savings & Investment Groups

Intergenerational Care & Learning

- Intergenerational Care and Learning
- Community Participation and Social Inclusion
- Active Citizenship

Design Interpretation

The website should:

- Present people as active participants and changemakers rather than beneficiaries.
- Highlight stories of growth, behaviour change, leadership, participation, and collective action.
- Showcase community assets, strengths, relationships, and local knowledge.
- Present/ balance evidence of impact with warmth, humanity, and accessibility.
- Convey possibility, inclusion, and community-led development.
- Clearly communicate Imijelo's Theory of Change throughout the user journey.
- Incorporate authentic photography (from real activities) that reflects diversity, inclusion, and intergenerational engagement.